SOLDIERS BURIED

Bodies of Loyal Americans Are To Be Removed From Fort Oglethorpe Cemetery.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Oct. 20. The local post of the American Legion has made an investigation into the burial of German prisoners and American soldiers together in the national cemetery here and Commandant.

In the national cemetery here, from which the soldiers of the Confederate army are barred, because they bere arms against the United States government, there is a prison plot, which consists of Section C. of the Fort Oglethorpe division of the cemetery reservation. In this prison plot are buried more than 50 of the interned enemy allens, who died at Fort Oglethorpe, and five American officers and soldiers. Carl H. Hood announces that the graves are changed, "if it is necessary to take the matter to the floor of congress for authority to separate the loyal, patriotic Americans from the traitorous aliens who were interned because of their plottings against the United States government."

FIRM SUES BANK OVER BOND STATEMENT

LEXINGTON. Miss., Oct. 20. (Spl.)—Mayes & Potter, altorneys of Jackson, representing Eugene Cole, president of Cole Trading Co., of Durant, have filed in the circuit court of this county two damage suits for $25,900 each, one against the Bank of Durant and one against Charles Humoldstein, who is cashier of that institution.

The suit arose from an advertisement published by the bank that they had $1,000 of Liberty bonds for sale that were ordered for Cole Trading Co., and refused. The Cole Trading Co., claim they ordered them through the Central-State National bank, of Memphis, and took and paid for that amount. The case comes up at the next term of circuit court.

Actor Seen Every Week; Audience Doesn't Know It

BY MEMORY M'CORD.

Probably ever theaterguer in Mem-hie has zeen Chalmers Cullins upon he slage, and yet dniy one in a hun-ired would mecognize him upon the treat street.

It isn't ord when you come to think of it, because although Cullins is a Memphis man, most of his life has been apent behind the footlights of the old Grand opera house and the Orpheum stage—doing what?

Well, he is listed as "property man." but during the 14 years that Cullins has been in the business, he has taken part in over 8.000 vaudeville acts, playing everything from a flossy French maild to a buriesque jugsling comedian. He did it all, too, with little or no practice—simply filling in where he was needed.

Nobody knew exactly how it began, but once in the early days when Cullins was a cardboy setting up signs that announced the acts, a crany looking fellow arrived with a call for two negro mothers and a couple of pick-anniny babies. The old fellow's train had been late and when he blew in it was only a few minutes before his "act." "act."
"Here, shake a leg," he said to the

was only a few minutes before his "act"

"Here, shake a leg," he said to the stage help, "gimme a couple of kids and two negro women."

Time was short—every minute counted. From an alley outside one negro woman and two little kids were spirited. No others could be located. In the horrible confusion that resulted Cullins emerged attired in full negro makeup. He took the part and played it so well that the old fellow offered him a "regular job" and the end of the week.

Cullins refused, but somehow talk of his latest development got out and little by little he began to earn recognition from all the actors and actresses that breezed into the city. He took up fairey bleycle stunts and learned to do all sorts of dances. Then from constant "appearances" he picked up tricks all of his own and soon men and women were begging him to sign up for season here and three and everywhere.

As a result his salary skedaddled skyward. He took to spending his summers in old New York. There at the Henderson theater, Coney Island, actors who had heard of his talent sought him "to fill out for a couple of nights, old scout," and afterward there was the offer, always. Still Cullins refused to "sign up" and marrying a New York girl he beat it back to Memphis.

Here little Emily Eleanor Cullins rame into the world and strangely enough she inherited her daddy's theater instinct. Only 6 years of age she has had any number of offers to make an astonishing number of shekels I rominent among the people who seek her is Gus Edwards, Memphis favorite, and Al Herman, black-face comedian with whom the little girl has once appeared at the Orpheum.

"I don't knew how it will all come out," Cullins said to me yesterday at the theater, "still Emily probably will make a good little actress some day and if it satisfies her—well, it certainly does me."
